The Future Was Secured

Sunday morning, October 14, 1924 dawned cold and wet. The Green Bay Packers had a game scheduled that afternoon against the Minneapolis Marines. This was only the third year in the newly formed National Professional Football League for the fledgling team. The pro sport itself was in its infancy and was suffering from both birth pangs and growing pains. Although local fan interest was high, enthusiasm dampened along with the soggy weather. Two games that season had already been all but washed out — and low attendance drained the slim treasury to the red ink mark. If the weather didn't clear soon, there would be another sparse crowd on hand — not enough paid admissions to meet the visiting team's guarantee. Two men, George W. Calhoun and Curly Lambeau, pondered the alternatives. To cancel the game entirely and refund the price of tickets already bought would assure them of not going in the hole. But doing this could also prompt the league to relinquish the Packer franchise for violating league rules in that the visitors' guarantee was not met. There seemed to be no way out since neither man had the resources to meet the financial emergency that would surely arise as the rain continued and kickoff time drew nearer.

Into this atmosphere of gloom stepped Andrew B. Turnbull, who had helped the young team along with the others. Turnbull's successful business background often served as useful counsel to the zealously enthusiastic but woefully inexperienced worriers he now faced. Turnbull didn't hesitate long after being told the circumstances threatening the very existence of the Packers. He insisted the game be played as scheduled even if no one but the referees showed up to watch. The game was played and a loss of $2,500.00 was suffered by the team, but Turnbull signed for a loan at a local bank and bailed the group out of their sea of red ink.

The success of any organization depends in large measure on how its affairs are conducted during times of crisis and stress. Often these periods come about with little or no warning. It is at these crucial times that the quality of leadership (of lack thereof) becomes apparent.

Fate later favored the Packers with success on the field and at the gate as competition, civic pride and curiosity kept crowds overflowing the shrinking seating accommodations.

The courage of the Packer leaders on that cold, rainy Sunday helped to secure the future of the Packers and has created a legend unique in professional sports in this country and in the entire world.

A MEAN JOB

. . . SCORING POINTS

By ART DALEY
Editor, Green Bay Packer Yearbook

Bart Starr faces a mean job . . . scoring points in the defense-minded National Football League.

This could have been written 10 years ago . . . when Bart Starr was the Packer quarterback.

Things have changed in the years since Starr engineered a potent Packer offense.

For one thing, Starr is now head coach and general manager of the Packers . . . and for another, points are really hard to come by these days.

These facts are merely presented as a means of introducing the 16th edition of the Green Bay Packer Yearbook — a sort of bible created to gather and record the annual doings of the Sports Wonder of the World.

Starr is the Packers' eighth head coach in their 58-year history. He succeeded Dan Devine last Dec. 24.

Starr played quarterback 16 years for Green Bay, starting in 1956 as a rookie out of the University of Alabama. He has tasted the bitter and sweet of Packer football —from a 56-0 loss to the Baltimore Colts in 1958 to two Super Bowl championships.

Starr has played under five of the Packers' previous seven head coaches—Liz Blackbourn, Scooter McLean, Vince Lombardi, Phil Bengtson and Devine. Only two coaches preceded Starr's time — Gene Ronzani and the founder, Curly Lambeau.

Starr had one year of coaching experience—1972 when he handled Packer quarterbacks. It's recorded history that the '72 team finished with a 10-4 record and the Central Division championship. It's not necessarily recorded that Starr called signals for young sophomore QB Scott Hunter via a messenger system.

The Packers scored 304 points in 1972 — the first time they had exceeded the magic 300 mark since the championship '67 campaign.

The Packer offense deteriorated badly since '72, totaling 202 points in '73 and 210 a year ago.

Thus, a 300-point total would seem to be a logical goal for '75 — even in a defense-oriented league.

Only seven teams in the NFL exceeded 300 points in '74, five in the AFC and only two in the NFC, and five of them reached the playoff — Oakland, Pittsburgh, Miami, Minnesota and Washington. Los Angeles and St. Louis, with 263 and 285, respectively, also were in the playoffs.

The season of '74 was the first under the new rules designed to increase the scoring but actually there were eight teams with 300-point totals in '73, five in the NFC and three in the AFC.

There is little question but what the emphasis has been placed on the offense by Starr in the early camps at Scottsdale and in Green Bay.

Starr has told his players that the defense has been carrying the offense the last couple of years and he'd like to change that. Green Bay finished sixth in defense and 21st on offense in the NFL last year.

The Packer defense, pride and joy of Asst. Head Coach Dave Hanner, has been able to maintain a 17-point (17.66, to be exact) permission average during the last four years. Those are championship figures for defense. The offense, however, in that period averaged only 17.67 points per game.

In one respect, Starr faces the exact opposite task that Vince Lombardi experienced when he took over in '59.

Starr is blessed with a tough defense, while the team that Lombardi inherited had given up 382 points in a 12-game schedule. As Vince said at the time, "the worst thing for a team's offense is to see its defense get run over." By comparison, the 1974 Packers allowed only 206 points in 14 games.

Offensively, Starr faces a major sales job, if you will.

As he pointed out last spring, "we've got to have our people on offense all believing in what we're trying to do and understanding how we're trying to achieve it.

"For instance, we've got to do a better job of putting more pressure on opposing defenses with John Brockington. We can't just give the ball to Brockington every time.

Mac Lane and the others who complement him in the backfield have to be effective as runners as well as blockers. And when Brockington is the blocker, he has to excel in that area, so the other backs can be effective runners.

"We've got to have better execution in our passing game when we need it — on third down."

The whole business comes down to balance between the ground and air games.

Starr has an excellent blend of experience at quarterback. John Hadl is in his 14th season, Jack Concannon his 11th and Jerry Tagge his fourth.

It all starts at quarterback . . . and the competition among these three during the six-game pre-season campaign certainly will go a long ways toward determining the success of the offense once the team gets on the fast track.

The hoped-for base of the new 1975 Packers — a balanced offense and continued rugged performances by the defense! The rest of the 1975 Yearbook relates the specifics.

The adrenalin started flowing last Dec. 24 . . . and it all leads up to Sept. 21, 1975 when the Big Game Phase of the Starr Era officially begins for the Packers.

Never before have the Packers entered a more exciting and more hopeful era . . . This is the first time in the club's history that a home-grown Packer has taken over as head coach and Starr goes into his gigantic task as the people's choice . . . or favorite son, if you please.

Starr has the best wishes of all Packer fans . . . and that goes triple from this writer.

BART STARR
the art of the unexpected

By Lee Remmel
Green Bay Packer Director of Publicity

As a quarterback, a position over which he presided with uncommon and surgical skill for 16 NFL seasons, Bart Starr made an art of the unexpected.

To be more precise, he specialized in surprise — e.g., the "home run" to Max McGee or Carroll Dale on third-and-one, an exquisitely executed maneuver which was a Packer hallmark during Green Bay's delightfully prosperous '60s. More often than not, it caught an enemy defense slumbering in a "sure" running situation, an involuntary tribute to Mr. Quarterback's acumen and finesse.

And who has forgotten his celebrated sneak for the deciding touchdown in the now legendary "Ice Bowl" playoff with Dallas in 1967? One of the most dramatic denouements in the history of sports, under the spartan circumstances of that sub-zero Sunday, it even was a revelation to backfield colleague Chuck Mercein, intimately involved in the climactic proceedings. He had fully expected to get the handoff on that final play of the most frigid football game ever played.

The cool and resourceful Starr thus was entirely in character when, not yet 41, he decided to take on the awesome assignment as head coach and general manager of the Packers — after just one season's experience as an assistant coach.

It was, quite clearly, a radical departure from the NFL norm. Customarily, such an imposing plateau has been scaled only after laboring long in the vineyard — extensive apprenticeship as an assistant coach in the pro ranks or in the wake of a distinguished head coaching career at the college level, a refining process which obviously smoothes the transition to head coach of a major league team, not an inconsiderable step from any professional point.

How and where, then, did Starr begin the massive task of selecting a coaching staff and restructuring the Packer front office to rehabilitate a football team which had plunged from division champion to distant also-ran over the space of

DEC. 24, 1974 A MEMORABLE DAY

Dec. 24, 1974 was a memorable day in the history of the Packers.

It was the day the Packers announced the selection of Bryan Bartlett Starr, then 40, as their head coach and general manager.

Here are some selected quotations from Starr as he made his first appearance before the press, radio and TV that day:

"I'm absolutely ecstatic about this opportunity and I want to thank the Executive Committee for giving it to me. I'm humbled by it but I'm not awed by it."

"I'm not as qualified as I'd like to be but I'm willing."

"I ask for the prayers and the patience of all Packer fans. We will earn everything else."

"I believe one of the qualities lacking in society today is strong leadership. I will be expected to provide leadership and this will be one of the interesting areas of the challenge."

Quoting Winston Churchill: "To every man there comes in his lifetime that special moment when he is figuratively tapped on the shoulder and offered that chance to do a very special thing, unique to him and his talents. What a tragedy if that moment finds him unprepared or unqualified for that work."

"Everyone has to pull together from within. There can be no bickering. I hope to build on the great lessons we learned from Coach Vince Lombardi."

"For one reason or another I could not get that excited about going somewhere else (Starr had been offered the Los Angeles Ram and Houston Oiler jobs). I felt the timing somehow was not right. I didn't think it was right for my family or for me."

"I believe in delegating authority. People will have much more responsibility than they have ever had before and I mean all of our people — the captains, the assistant coaches and the people in the office."

"One of the first things I did was call Mrs. Lombardi and tell her I was taking the job."

"That (a three-year contract) was what I asked for and the committee was very agreeable. I probably could have asked for a longer term but I thought three years would be right for two reasons. No. 1, it indicates confidence on my part. And No. 2, it allows that governing group (the executive committee) to feel more relaxed. They're taking a big gamble in hiring someone as lacking in coaching experience as I am."

"The fan support has been very gratifying, very encouraging, and I would hope that it would help me. But I have no illusions of grandeur. I know this is going to be the toughest challenge I've every faced."

"I've been traveling around the counrty a lot the last few years and I've seen a growing trend toward less respect for the Packers than was accorded them in the past. That bothers me. I'd like to see the dignity and respect that were long a part of Packer tradition renewed. That weighed very, very heavily in my decision.

"It's not an ego trip. We've got no egos to feed. I don't have nearly all the answers I'd like to have, but we all learn day by day. But that challenge has a great deal to do with it."

"I only want to talk about things in the past that will help in the future."

two disastrous seasons?

Both candid and realistic, he is the first to admit his coaching experience has been modest. Likewise his administrative background, although he has had substantial success as an auto dealer in his native Montgomery, Ala. Starr also concedes the dimensions of the new and dual role are imposing, if not intimidating.

"Not having been through it before," he says simply, "you're not exactly sure how to go about it."

But, as one accustomed to "command" in the role of field general, the Packers' new leader was not lacking in conviction and concept. He knew what he wanted, and where he wanted to go.

"Originally, I had to make a decision about whether to apply for this position or not," he said. "I chose to do so because I wanted to be a part of a group that would help restore the prestige and tradition this team had for so long. I wanted to be part of that team."

Once the application had been made, and accepted, there arose the matter of approach. "I think, first of all, there was a need to try to surround yourself with the best people available," Starr says, reflecting upon the process with which he assembled his new brain trust, amid hectic and endless winter days on the telephone and continuous rounds of in-person interviews, plus hour upon hour of consultation with holdover aide Dave Hanner and other early staff members.

With this whirlwind process behind him, Starr expressed satisfaction with the results. "All of us are delighted with our coaching staff—we think we have some outstanding people," he said. "And I think everyone who has met them to date has come to the same conclusion.

"In conjunction with that search for coaching quality, there was the knowledge that if this organization were to remain strong and grow for years to come, it had to be strong administratively. So we obviously wanted to surround ourselves with capable people in this area. An obvious bonus here was the number of such people already in the organization.

"With our thoughts and objectives properly channeled, and everybody working toward a common goal, I think we have the people who can get the job done. That's where it all begins."

"And, if you're going to structure something enduring, you have to put it on a strong, sound foundation. You can't achieve anything if your structure is on a flimsy foundation. Accordingly, I felt we had to have the finest people possible. So we began to explore.

"There were some coaches who had written for interviews — Jim Colbert, our defensive backfield coach, is an example. I had a fine recommendation from someone I think a great deal of, considering John Meyer, our linebacker coach. He said he felt John was one of the finest young coaches in the game. After getting to know John, I agree. He's going to bring a vibrancy and a positive touch that everyone in his area is going to become aware of.

"Dave Hanner and several head coaches around the league were very high on Leon McLaughlin, our offensive line coach. And Bob Lord's reputation was one of outstanding character and a tremendous teacher. Lew Carpenter, I had always admired for his versatility and his poise as a player. I had never known him to blow an assignment when I played with him here. When that kind of dedication is carried over into coaching, it makes you want to contact him. Plus, he had had a great deal of experience on other staffs since I last saw him — exposure to varied ideologies.

"Zeke Bratkowski and I, of course, have had a unique relationship for years. I've always admired and respected him. I felt he has been an outstanding coach and I thought he would be a great addition to our staff. His loyalty is as solid as you could ever hope for. He has a tremendous desire to excel. These are some of the reasons I wanted to associate with Zeke.

"Dave Hanner's reputation is unquestioned in the league, of course," Starr said. "He is extremely well thought of. I can't think of anyone I'd rather have in charge of our defense. He's extremely sound, an excellent teacher, and a very thorough and well organized fundamentalist.

"The reputation of Paul Roach, our offensive coordinator, preceded him. He's been a winner everywhere he's been. He's extremely well organized and I think he has one of the finest football minds I've ever been exposed to. He came to us from a winning organization with a winning tradition. He's very sound.

"Jim Colbert is a good example of hard work paying off. He has come up through the high school and college ranks to the professional level. He's softspoken and low key, but he's a fierce competitor.

"Do you want to know something that might surprise you? I never met Jim before I hired him. I merely talked to him on the phone. The glowing recommendations I received about him and the letter he wrote were sufficiently impressive for me to hire him sight unseen."

Discussing the formula he employed in arriving at his decisions, the scholarly Starr explained, "What we were seeking in all of these coaches were people with outstanding character, people who took a great deal of pride in their profession, who were sound fundamentally, excellent teachers, and had a genuine desire to work with the Green Bay Packers.

"We were fortunate that some of these people we had heard about were allowed to talk to us by their clubs because of changes in other places, which had nothing to do with them personally. And, in the case of Paul Roach, he sought permission from Oakland to seek a position with more responsibility than he had with the Raiders, which he has been given as our offensive coordinator.

Starr long since has made "attitude" the watchword of his infant regime and, despite those who insist the modern athlete no longer is dedicated to his profession, he foresees no problem in this area . . . Quite the contrary.

"I think many of the players of today have taken a bum rap," he says with impressive vigor. "A number of people have been saying they are not as committed as players of the past were. I think by-and-large, they are. Most of them are involved in year-round conditioning programs, they take a great deal of pride in their performance, they are hardworking and they are serious about their profession.

"I haven't coached our players thus far, of course, except for the rookies and a few veterans at our spring camp in Scottsdale, and in our orientation camp in late May, but I'm sure they are as dedicated as any, and I'm looking forward to working with them.

"You always have had some who didn't fit into this category — and you always will," the Packers' youthful head coach concedes. "But we have a lot of fine young men playing a super game.

"Let's look at the positive — enough has been said about the negative. The good guys never get enough ink. A number of players are giving a great deal of themselves to their communities, in charitable and civic projects. These are things you don't read or hear very much about. It always has been this way and, unfortunately, it is not likely to change."

BART STARR . . . IN CLASSIC AFTER-PASS POSE.

From a personnel standpoint, the Starr approach has been conservative — perhaps surprisingly so — but not entirely out of choice.

Addressing himself to the Packers' limited off-season activity in the trade mart, he points out, "Obviously, if you have needs, you want to fill those spaces. But you want to deal from strengths. You deal from an area where you have the luxury to be able to trade a player or a top draft choice. But we're void in both areas. We need all the good football players we have right now."

Contrasting his new role to his 1972 experience as an assistant coach, Starr says he already has made a significant discovery. Chuckling, he candidly confides, "I've found out there's a great deal of difference between a suggestion and a decision . . ."

Sobering, he added, "It's been a tremendous learning experience so far. You have ideas and thoughts about how and what you want to do. Not having been through it before, you're not exactly sure how to go about it. I think this is where you rely on the experience of others. You reflect on what they have said and try to make the best decision possible.

Understandably, as a head coach and an ex-quarterback of impressive credentials, Starr intends to become deeply involved in the Packer offense—but within a flexible framework which will permit his assistants latitude and authority.

"I will take a very active role," he says, "but I feel if you have quality people, talented people, you also should give them a pretty free reign with respect to responsibility. I think we have established a pretty good working relationship with your staff. I think there is room for personal expression — I think you have to have this kind of atmosphere. This is how you get good ideas exchanged.

"I expect to be involved in the offense just as much as I hope to get as involved as humanly possible in our defense, but Dave Hanner is going to run it. That's his strength.

"We're Going To Get There"

I'll be learning from him.

"I'll be working closely with the offense because I feel, as I have said in the past, that it is the segment of the team that we have to spend a lot of time with to help restore its confidence."

Inevitably Starr is mindful he risks tarnishing his legendary status by taking on his current assignment, which he assumed when tendered a three-year contract by the Packer Executive Committee.

"Quite logically, you are risking your reputation," agrees the man who escorted the Packers to five world championships during an unprecedented seven-year span in the '60s. "You certainly are."

Rising from a chair in his darkly paneled Lombardi Avenue office, he moved toward the south wall. Pointing, he said, "There's a creed — written by a man named Dean Alfange — and I've hung it on my wall. I like to read it from time to time because I like what the fellow said and I can't say it that well . . . It says:

" 'I do not choose to be a common man . . . if I can. I seek opportunity . . . not security.

" 'I do not wish to be a kept citizen, humbled and dulled by having the state look after me. I want to take the calculated risk; to dream and to build, to fail and to succeed. I refuse to barter incentive for a dole.

" 'I prefer the challenge of life to the guaranteed existence; the thrill of fulfillment to the stale calm of Utopia. I will not trade freedom for beneficence nor my dignity for a handout.

" 'I will never cower before any master nor bend to any threat. It is my heritage to stand erect, proud and unafraid; to think and act for myself, enjoy the benefits of my creations and to face the world boldy and say, this I have done.

" 'All this is what it means to be

CHERRY STARR takes a look at BART

By LEN WAGNER
Green Bay Press-Gazette

There was the night several years ago when Bart Starr was due to attend a banquet at which he was to receive the sponsoring organization's annual "Nice Guy Award." As he was dressing and preparing to leave for the prestigious affair, his mind was still on some troubles of the day and his conversation with his wife, Cherry, was more a series of growls.

Finally, after enduring just so much of this apparent irritation, Cherry coyly asked, "What kind of award are you receiving tonight?"

At least that's the story Starr tells.

It's almost as if he is fighting to erase the image that he has established for himself. "He's too nice a guy" was the one real concern of many Packer fans when it became virtually certain that Starr was to be named successor to Dan Devine as head coach of the Packers.

And Starr, ever conscious of the inevitable comparison to his professional mentor, the irrascible Vince Lombardi, has declared time and again since being given the task of rallying the Pack that he's not all that nice a guy.

"I'm not the sweet guy — almost prude — I've been built up to be," he told a meeting of still unbelieving sportswriters in mid-spring. It was almost a defensive statement, especially when he added "I just believe in treating people with dignity."

But while Starr fights for his right to be mean, ill-tempered, tough, a tyrant or even a bully, his wife refutes every argument he offers.

She won't let that Nice Guy Award get tarnished. To listen to Mrs. Starr, her husband is a combination Jack Armstrong, Robert Redford, Billy Graham and . . . well, Bart Starr.

And yet . . .

"He's a very demanding person," Cherry acknowledges. "He's a perfectionist. Even at home. Because of that, he's not always easy to live with. But while he's demanding, he's not unreasonable. He insists, though, that everything is done in orderly fashion and on time. I spend a great deal of time seeing that things are done the way he wants them done. I've learned in 21 years that everything must be well planned and well carried out."

It sounds like the perfect prescription for a coach.

But when it gets down to specifics, Cherry says she can't find a single real fault or a single thing that really disturbs her man.

Impossible, you say? Well, what else would you expect from a guy whose worst habit, in the eyes of his wife, is that he takes a "huge bowl of chocolate almond ice cream to bed with him every night."

And she really means every night and she really means chocolate almond. No other flavor will do.

That in itself is indicative of the orderliness in Bart Starr's personality, a trait that has been carried from his home life to the office and to the footfield field. It has been impressed upon his staff and upon those who have observed him carrying out his tasks.

No wonder Cherry finds an emphasis of this in the fact that "he must have all his pants hanging in the same direction in his closet. He has one place for his short sleeve shirts and another for his long sleeve shirts and they better be in the right place."

When Cherry was ill for a few days and Bart had to handle some of the cooking and running of the household, the lady of the house had no fears.

"You should have seen the kitchen," she exclaimed. "It was so clean. He proved to be just as meticulous keeping house as with anything else."

Despite this penchant for order, Starr does find times to relax. Most of what little spare time he has revolves around his home and family and a few close friends.

Cherry says he likes to work around the house and yard but doesn't have much time to devote to it. He likes to golf, play tennis, hunt and fish, often in the company of his sons, Bart Jr. and Brett.

A good deal of the family time is spent at a second home on Bass Lake near Antigo. The Starrs built the home a few years ago and Bart was really enthused about it, Cherry relates. But at the time Bart was still involved actively with the Packers and didn't get to participate much in the actual planning.

"I think he only saw it once while it was under construction. And then after a game one Sunday, he wanted to go up and take another look," Cherry recalls with obvious relish. "Well, you should have seen him when he found it already completed, furnished and with food in the refrigerator. He couldn't believe it. But now he likes to spend as much time there as possible."

Prime entertainment for the Starrs is a quiet evening at home or perhaps a quiet dinner with friends at Green Bay's Oneida Golf and Riding Club. They seldom dine at any area supper clubs only because the quiet and privacy they cherish so much would be lost.

At home, Bart would enjoy some southern cooking, fried chicken particularly. Maybe some Mexican food or Italian. Cherry says he loves spaghetti.

After dinner, it could be a television show they all enjoy or listening to music on the stereo. Both Bart and Cherry like what they call semi-classical music, the likes of Roger Williams and especially Mantovani. But Cherry says Bart can be heard humming or whistling some of the current hits too.

Occasionally, Bart and Cherry may take in a movie "if it's an exceptional one," she says.

It all gives strength to the public pedestal on which Starr finds himself.

"Our life is on a pretty even keel," Cherry says. "That's the way Bart is. He's so tolerant of people. It's so seldom he ever gets mad."

It's always been that way for Bart and Cherry. Since back in their high school days in Alabama. They were both juniors when they began dating.

"Bart had been observing me for several months," Cherry remembers with a still girlish tinge to her delightful southern sound. "He was extremely shy, though, and he sent a friend over to arrange a date for him. I said if he wanted a date, he'd have to ask me himself. He did and the first time we went out I decided he was the nicest person I ever went out with. And that feeling has just intensified ever since.

"Really, he's the same person the public sees."

an American.' "

Nodding emphatic agreement with these positive sentiments, Starr asserted, "I'm not interested in security. I think this game has given me a great deal. I have an opportunity to give some of it back. Idealistic? Maybe it is, but this is the way I feel about it.

"It's all part of the challenge — part of what drives, pushes and challenges a man to do certain things. The easy way out would have been to say, 'No, thanks. I'm not interested.' That doesn't take much courage. The easy thing, "Starr said, exhibiting a faintly scornful smile, "never does.

"We will never ask of our staff or our people more than we are ready to give ourselves. When you place your own feelings, your own motives and dreams and desire on the line, you can have people relate better to you and your goals.

"To put it bluntly, you put all these things where your mouth is. So when you ask a player to put it all up front — don't give any lip service — he can respond the way he should because you've done all those things yourself."

Realistic about the task ahead, Starr assures, "This is not going to be an easy process. We don't have any illusions. We know it's going to be a long, hard pull.

"But," he vowed, a steely glint leaping into the level, blue eyes, "we are going to get there."

BART STARR

Head Coach — General Manager

BORN:	Montgomery, Ala., Jan. 9, 1934
COLLEGE:	University of Alabama
PRO CAREER:	Drafted No. 17, Green Bay Packers, 1956 Retired July, 1972
COACHING:	Quarterback Coach, Green Bay Packers, 1972 Head Coach-General Manager, 1975-.
FAMILY:	Wife, Cherry, 2 sons

By CHUCK LANE
Green Bay Packer Director of Public Relations

Bart Starr is the people's choice. Sixteen years a player and one as an assistant coach was ample evidence of his technical knowledge, leadership ability and his motivational skills. The fans wanted Bart; he was a product of the proud past and their hope for the future.

Equally assumed—and rumored in Titletown — was that he would surround himself with the same cast who had helped mold an unprecedented and since unequalled dynasty. The Woods, Dowlers, Dales, Nitschkes, Ringos or Greggs of the past, the fans thought, would again give hope to the future.

Instead, Bart has chosen a group of men who have varied backgrounds and experience at all levels — men who bring a divergence of varied expertise into a meld of coaching philosophy.

As Bart explained, "counting myself, we have five men on this staff with Green Bay roots. To overload on one aspect of philosophy would risk becoming too inbred. I want men around me who think differently and are willing to express it."

Instead of the ever dangerous philosophy of listening to an echo, Starr brought to Green Bay elements of the Oakland offense (the NFL's best); one of the NFL's most imaginative passing attacks (via Sid Gillman and Norm Van Brocklin as witnessed by Lew Carpenter); a basic fundamentalist of the Detroit offense; the grit and tenacity of Chicago's defense; a ring-wise and exuberant veteran of the WFL; and a highly recommended, youthful linebacker coach from Detroit's improving defense.

Plus, Starr returned Zeke Bratkowski to the fold to aid the quarterbacks (a move immediately applauded by John Hadl); retained Dave Hanner, recognized finally as the annual architect of one of the league's top defensive units; and established a new department under Billy Kinard: Research and Development to up-grade the system through self-analysis and study.

Looking forward and never back, Starr must still concern himself with curing ills of old, and the most pressing area of need is in the passing game. Overall the Packer offense was 21st among 26 clubs in 1974, with the rushing attack 19th and the pass attack 17th; the points scored (despite the league's most prolific scorer in placekicker Chester Marcol) likewise ranked 21st among 26 teams. In short, the offense, to roll in '75, must be overhauled.

Chief mechanic summoned to supervise the remodeling is Raider assistant Paul Roach, who brings with him most impressive credentials at both the collegiate and professional levels. The Raider offense finished first in 1974, due in part to Roach's expertise.

Roach's acquisition was no small feat, luring an established coach from the NFL's most consistent winner, but it gives Packer fans great comfort to know that the highly respected Wisconsin native is back and his major job will be to bring back the Pack's offensive unit.

Equally important to providing a balanced attack, and the success of all elements, are Roach's fellow assistants on offense: Leon McLaughlin, Bratkowski and Carpenter.

Managing by priority and goal, Starr selected first (in the second round, the 64th player chosen in the draft) an offensive lineman, one Bill Bain, to further insulate the forward wall against injury and age. The seriousness of this situation reflects prime position on Starr's list of priorities among his coaches.

To carry out this priority, Starr selected as his offensive line coach Leon McLaughlin, a veteran competitor who played with the Rams seven seasons. Like most of the Starr assistants McLaughlin has varied experience at the high school, college and professional (Rams and Lions) level. McLaughlin has shown his ability to communicate and instruct the fundamentals which will upgrade the performances of the men up front through improved techniques.

Ex-Packer additions, and men who likewise bring a blend of other systems and thinking back to the Pack are Bratkowski (1963-1968, 1971 with the Packers as player; 1969-1970 as coach; 1972-74 coach with Bears) and Carpenter (1959-1963 as player with Packers; Asst. coach with Vikings, Falcons, Redskins, Cards and Oilers).

Both have deep roots in the Packers' rich heritage and are two more examples of how Bart aims to use the past as a reminder to excel in the present.

On defense, Dave Hanner not only remains, but now holds the title of assistant head coach, a position never before created. Dave and Bart go back a long time—back to 1956 as a matter of fact, when Hanner, a four-year vet welcomed a rookie by the name of Starr to the pros, and offered "someone to lean on" whenever he needed help.

On defense, Hanner will be teaming with newcomers Jim Colbert in the secondary and John Meyer with the linebackers. Colbert, last year, coached in the World Football League, serving as the defensive coordinator of the Portland Storm. Jim's background in high school and collegiate coaching brings varied experience, plus his stock-in-trade, enthusiasm, which was reflected in his ability to keep his WFL athletes performing last year despite lack of remuneration.

The linebackers, talented though they are, will have the benefit of working with young (33) John Meyer, one of Coach Starr's earliest coaching appointments. John, whose pro playing (St. Louis Cards and Houston Oilers) and coaching (Houston, New England, and Detroit) performances makes him one of the most highly recommended additions to Starr's new staff.

And, as yet further proof of his attention to detail, Starr has selected Bob Lord to handle the special teams, plus he will work with the offensive linemen (together with McLaughlin) away from the point of attack. In short, the offensive linemen will receive twice the attention they had in the past, plus Lord's background in high school, college and pro (Chicago Bears) football, will reflect in the enthusiasm he generates with both often neglected, but highly important units.

When Starr assumed the responsibility of leading the Pack back, he called upon the fans for "their prayers and their patience. The rest we'll earn." Hard work and solid men mix well, and as the season dawns the new attitude and atmosphere is remarkably evident. The new assistants have already made their mark, but the main influence will soon be felt.

Defense plays as a unit

By CLIFF CHRISTL
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Dave Hanner leaves you with the impression he'd be more comfortable driving a pickup truck around a sprawling cattle ranch than sitting at a desk charting plays and designing formations.

A fair-skinned native of rural Arkansas, weathered by 13 years of playing time in the trenches of the National Football League, Hawg, as he is affectionately called, has resisted artificial refinement.

He dresses for comfort rather than appearance. He's maintained his Southern drawl despite spending a good portion of his adult life in the North. And, of course, there is the ubiquitous wad of tobacco packed tightly against his cheek.

Hanner comes on like Hoss Cartwright, a man of innocence and simplicity among his more sophisticated peers.

Nobody should make the mistake, however, of being deceived by his appearance. It belies his coaching acumen. In his 10 years as an assistant coach with the Packers, Hanner has established a reputation for possessing one of the shrewdest defensive minds in the game.

Last season, for the second time in three years, his defense ranked among the finest in the NFC. And it reached those heights without a devastating pass rush, perhaps, the most valuable commodity in the game today. Hanner, for example, has never been able to turn loose a line studded with an Alan Page and a Carl Eller, people capable of making any coach look like a genius.

Instead, he's been an efficiency expert, utilizing his resources and synchronizing his personnel to obtain maximum production.

"We've always stressed — and this goes back a long ways — that you're only as good as the guy who plays next to you," said Hanner, who now holds the dual title of assistant head coach and defensive coordinator. "We play as a unit, not as individuals and over the years it has paid off."

In 1974, the defense finished sixth statistically and fourth in fewest points allowed within the conference. Opposing teams were limited to a rather meager total of 14.7 points per game.

Considering the team's mediocre 6-8 record and severe internal problems, generally, it was a prosperous season. Hanner agrees, but then adds, "The only thing I was disappointed in was that in each Detroit game we gave up a long-gainer on a touchdown pass — I believe (Larry) Walton caught both of them — and in the first Chicago game we gave up a long-gainer on a touchdown.

"We don't mind giving yards up here and there, but we strive to prevent the long-gainer. I thought we gave up too many big plays."

Part of the challenge facing Hanner, or any other defensive strategist, today is keeping pace with the evolution of the game. The Packers, like every other club in the NFL, are showing more and more defensive variations. They've made increased use of the odd-man line, the 3-4-4 and 3-3-5 alignments, as well as other departures from the standard formation.

And Hanner anticipates the trend will continue. "I don't think the 4-3 can stop some of the things people are running," he said. "A few years ago—yes. But today offensive people have a little more variation.

DEFENSIVE LINEMEN MIKE McCOY, ALDEN ROCHE AND CLARENCE WILLIAMS (L-R) WATCH OFFENSE ON FIELD AGAINST BEARS IN MILWAUKEE NOV. 10.

"Some of these other alignments have been good to us. I don't think they are defenses you'd want to play against everyone, every Sunday. But I think a mixup is good."

Something else falling into Hanner's domain is selection and continuous evaluation of the defensive personnel. He handles these responsibilities in conjunction with Head Coach Bart Starr and his two new defensive aides, secondary coach Jim Colbert and linebacker coach John Meyer, among others.

For the most part, the talent at their disposal is far better than satisfactory.

If the Packers' cast of defenders is suspect for any reason it would be that a number of individuals have been prone to inconsistency, playing well one year and only fair the next, rather than leveling off at a peak of excellence.

"I don't understand it," Hanner said while searching for an explanation. "I have my own personal feelings on why it happens to some of them, but I wouldn't dare mention it. Sometimes bumps and bruises have something to do with it, but they're still getting paid well and have to overcome it."

And 1975, Hanner believes, might be the year his unit puts it all together and even exceeds its impressive accomplishments of the recent past. "We expect everyone on defense to reach their peak this season. And when I say everybody I mean the people who have been around for three or four years. They have to play as well as they ever have," he said with a distinct firmness.

Green Bay's front four will never be mistaken for Pittsburgh's in either deeds or ability but, for that matter, neither will anybody else's in the NFL.

Ends Alden Roche and Clarence Williams, and tackle Mike McCoy are, for the most part, steady and consistent and not about to embarrass themselves or Hanner. A year ago, they sacked opposing quarterbacks a creditable 28 times and held the opposition to a paltry 3.5 yards per rush.

Certainly, when it comes to harassing the passer, there is room for improvement, but as Hanner quickly notes in behalf of his linemen, "We play the run first, the pass second."

Nobody in the front four has ever played in the Pro Bowl, but McCoy and Roche are coming off banner years and draw lavish praise from their master.

"Roche is the type of guy who gives you 100 per cent every down, run or pass, wet or dry. He's a fierce competitor," Hanner extolled, before turning to McCoy and adding with comparable approval, "Mike's going to be one of the best in the business for a number of years to come."

At linebacker, with Jim Carter, Ted Hendricks and Fred Carr, the Packers have nothing but Pro Bowl participants. All of them played in the game at least once and represent the heart of the defense.

"I think our three linebackers are as good as there are in the business," Hanner claims without reservation.

Except for maybe Joe Greene and L. C. Greenwood, half of Pittsburgh's vaunted front four, there probably wasn't a more dominating defensive force in the game last year than Hendricks. He's a big-play specialist and one of the few defensive players who has the capacity to turn a game around. In 1974, he intercepted five passes and blocked seven kicks.

Playing opposite Hendricks on the right side, Carr, naturally, was overshadowed, but still graded out down-after-down as well, if not better, than his more publicized teammate.

Last season was not among Carter's better ones, but he undoubtedly has the ability to rebound. "Last year he had some problems with a knee, but this year I don't think anything should hold him back," said Hanner.

The Packers' defensive coordinator feels the same way about his cornerbacks as he does his linebackers. He's of the opinion there isn't a better pair in the game than Willie Buchanon and Ken Ellis, although both may have performed below their potential in '74.

The deep backs accounted for just 14 of the team's 23 interceptions and need to force more turnovers. "We had our hands on quite a few," Hanner lamented, "but we didn't hold on to them. It only takes one or two turnovers when two good ball clubs meet and sometimes that's the difference between winning and losing. We have to be more opportunistic."

One other defender on the verge of reaching maturity is strong safety Al Matthews, the epitome of the unsung star.

the Offensive Line can be a mighty force

By MIKE KUPPER
The Milwaukee Journal

Leon McLaughlin never has been accused of looking like Robert Young, and he has not the faintest desire to play Marcus Welby, MD.

The Packers' assistant coach in charge of the offensive line fervently hopes, therefore, that the injuries that ravaged Green Bay's forward wall last season find their way to some other sector of the NFL. For as he sees things now, with everybody in the bloom of good health, the Packers' offensive line can be a mighty force in the rejuvenation of a lackluster attack.

"We've got some plus factors," McLaughlin said, and listed Bruce Van Dyke, Bill Hayhoe, Dick Himes and Larry McCarren among them.

Hayhoe, Himes and McCarren are familiar names to Packer fans, and Van Dyke's might have been, too, had he been able to play any ball with the Packers last year, after they got him from the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Van Dyke, still to be paid for with a third round choice in next year's draft, came to the Packers last September as bruised property and never played a down, spending the season on the injured reserve list with a knee injury.

That injury is history now, though, Van Dyke said. "There's no problem, I'm healed. I'm going full speed on it now."

Van Dyke was among the injured veterans invited to the three-day rookies camp in Arizona last April and McLaughlin was satisfied with Van Dyke's health then. "He appeared to be well," he said. And contemplating Van Dyke's possible contributions, he said, "he was in the Pro Bowl two years ago. A guy like that can help any team.

"Hayhoe also appeared to be well," he said, speaking of the big tackle who has missed most of the last two seasons with leg fractures. "You wonder whether he's accident prone or just had bad luck, but he's healed now. Van Dyke and Hayhoe, that's two plusses right there."

"Himes was hindered by a bad knee all last season," McLaughlin said. "If he's well, he should play better than when his knee was hurting. And the other plus factor is at center."

McCarren spent most of the season there, being spelled from time to time and on long snaps by the veteran John Schmitt. "McCarren was a relative rookie last year, and now he has had a year of experience," McLaughlin said. "Normally, a player will improve more between his first and second years than between, say, his seventh and

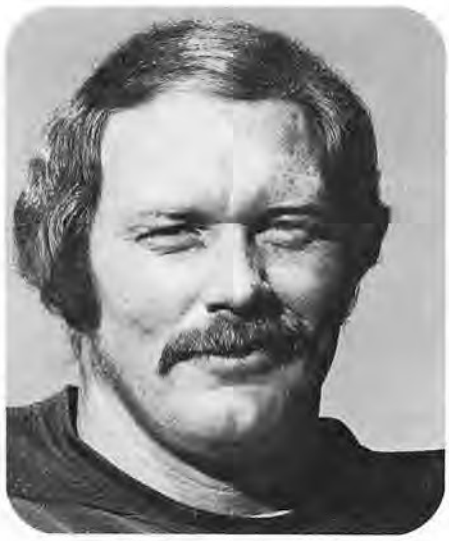
BRUCE VAN DYKE



BILL HAYHOE

eighth. By that standard, McCarren should be better this year."

A plus that McLaughlin hadn't been aware was in danger is represented by Gale Gillingham, the club's all-pro guard. Gillingham was strongly considering retirement at the end of last season, then began to change his mind when Dan Devine resigned, and changed it all the way around when Bart Starr was named to succeed him.

"I hadn't known about that, but I'm awfully glad to hear it," McLaughlin said. "Gilly's a real bright spot in our situation."

Guard Bill Bain, the club's top draft choice from southern California, may prove to be a find, but that's just what he will have to do, McLaughlin said, prove it. "Not many rookies make a big difference, but he's a real fine prospect."

For all of its problems in 1974, Green Bay's offensive line did have its moments. For instance, Packer quarterbacks were thrown for losses while attempting to pass only 17 times, second low in the National Football League.

Even so, the Packers' passing attack was far from potent. Last year, the quarterbacks were operating primarily out of a shallow pocket, though, dropping back only three or five steps, rather than seven. That meant they were getting their passes off quicker, which may have partially accounted for the low sack figure.

It may also have had something to do with the Packers' shaky passing game, though, since it restricted the attack to short passes, and there are other plans for 1975. Zeke Bratkowski, the quarterback coach, said that his quarterbacks this year still would be using the shallow pocket, but the deep one as well.

"Different situations call for different things," he said. "Three steps get you back five yards, five steps seven yards, and seven steps nine yards. We'll use all of those techniques. You've got to use them all. You're leaving out an important part of your game if you don't."

So, the offensive line probably will be required to dig in on pass protection for longer periods of time, and probably oftener, too.

The running game, too, needs improvement over a year ago and the line will play a major part in that. It behooves Dr. McLaughlin, then, to keep his troops in prime condition.

GALE GILLINGHAM

The offensive line got an added lift in early summer when Coach Bart Starr announced the return of Bill Curry, who began his pro career with the Packers in 1965. Bill was obtained from the Los Angeles Rams for a draft choice.

Curry was originally a 20th round draft pick by the Packers and spent the 1965-66 seasons here. However, after starting most of his second year, he was placed on the expansion list and claimed by New Orleans in 1967.

The Saints traded him to the Colts before he ever played a game for them. And then for most of six years, Curry was the Colts' starting center, twice achieving all-pro.

He was traded to Houston prior to the '73 season, but suffered a serious knee injury in the fourth game. The Oilers waived him last summer and he signed with the Los Angeles Rams, seeing limited service behind Ken Iman and Rich Saul.

"It gives us added strength at a vital position on the ballclub," Starr said. "I've talked to Bill and he told me he feels good and is recovered from the knee injury he had in Houston. Because of his experience this position should be much stronger.

"I've also mentioned to Bill, we have a fine young center, McCarren, who has played. But we feel working with Bill will help Larry improve and also take some of the burden off of him because of his inexperience.

Earlier, Curry, who is also president of the National Football League Players Association, contemplated retirement.

"At the end of last season, the Rams made their plans pretty obvious by drafting two centers in the first five rounds," he said. "So I thought long and hard about retirement until I found out Bart was interested.

"Now I look at this as an opportunity to finish my career the way I always wanted to. Nobody wants to leave the game after sitting on someone's bench."

Curry and Starr have maintained contact with each other since their days as teammates and mutually respect one another.

"Bill will make a great leadership contribution," Starr said. "He's an outstanding citizen and will have a very positive influence on the younger players we have on the ballclub. If you wanted your son to grow up like a particular person, you'd be hard-pressed to find anyone to beat this kind of man."

After having his career take a discouraging turn for the worse following his '73 surgery, when the bone, ligaments and cartilage were all damaged in his knee, Curry believes this might be a new lease for him.

"The leg is completely mended," he said. "It was a long rehabilitation process and I was never completely satisfied with it last season. But three doctors now have told me it is completely sound structurally.

"I absolutely would not show up unless I knew I could play. That would be the worst kind of disillusionment. And to tell Bart Starr I could do it when I couldn't would be less than honest."

JOHN HADL BARKS SIGNALS IN HIS FIRST APPEARANCE AS A PACKER AGAINST THE REDSKINS IN GREEN BAY NOV. 3.

JOHN HADL a brand new arm

By LEN WAGNER
Green Bay Press-Gazette

When you buy a used Cadillac, you still expect to pay a steep price. Despite this, you're never really sure of what you are getting, even though the engine may have been overhauled.

And so it was when the Packers bought John Hadl from the Los Angeles Rams last year. Hadl ranked among the elite of the NFL quarterbacks. In fact, he was the reigning most valuable player in the league. Therefore, the price was high—two first round draft choices, two second round picks and a third.

Around the league, reports were rampant that Hadl, at 34-years-old, was well worn, his passing arm was deteriorating and the Packers were ripped off by the slick Rams.

But it turns out that Hadl has what he calls "a brand new arm," thanks to a fantastic series of exercises.

It is just this new . . . or rehabilitated or overhauled . . . arm that the Packers are now counting on to pitch them back to pro football respectability in 1975.

Hadl begins the year as the No. 1 quarterback. Behind him are Jack Concannon, another veteran; Jerry Tagge, the youngster who couldn't hang onto the top job last year; and Carlos Brown, a strong armed rookie who has stirred some hope for the future in the heart of the coaching staff.

While no one is writing off Concannon or Tagge, it is generally acknowledged by the coaches that Hadl must provide the medicine if the Packer offense is to recuperate from the ills it experienced last year when it ranked 10th of 13 teams in the NFC.

Although he did not participate in the spring camp, Hadl did huddle with the coaches at that time and told them that his arm is okay.

Hadl's own story of his arm and its problems provides a good basis for that touch of doubt.

Just after the 1973 season, Hadl was told by a doctor that his career was near an end. The only way to save it, the doctor insisted, was that he begin a series of specific exercises.

"My arm was simply freezing up on me," Hadl said. "Not to a degree that I couldn't throw, but it was an irritating thing. I first noticed it two years before. It would kind of come and go.

At times, however, it got so bad he couldn't sleep on his right side and it pained him just to move the arm.

"The arm felt pretty good if I warmed up. But if I didn't throw

JERRY TAGGE STANDS READY ON SIDELINE.

HADL PASSES 30,698 YARDS

John Hadl became one of a few NFL passers to exceed 30,000 yards in passing gains for a career during the 1974 season. He totaled 680 yards in 116 attempts with the Rams before being traded to Green Bay in midseason. He gained 1,072 yards on 89 completions in slightly more than six games with Green Bay.

In 13 seasons with the Chargers, Rams and Packers, Hadl has attempted 4,198 passes and completed 2,101 for 30,698 yards and a completion percentage of 50.1. He threw 231 touchdown passes and had 236 throws intercepted. His lifetime average gain per attempt is 7.31.

Hadl was with San Diego for 11 seasons before going to Los Angeles for 1973. He split '74 between LA and Green Bay.

in practice for a half hour, I'd have to warm up all over again," Hadl explained, indicating this is what he meant by it freezing up.

"What happens is that adhesions build up in your shoulder," he further explained. "It comes from throwing so much over the years. I hadn't done anything to compensate for that and didn't know what to do until I had a long talk with the doctor. He described the problem and said certain exercises would smooth the joint out and give it the movement factor I didn't have.

"Baseball pitchers have the same problem. Sandy Koufax had a similar thing along with his sore elbow and had to go through the same exercises I'm doing. Well, I started the exercises and within two weeks I had my full range back without pain. I've had a little pain since, but as soon as I exercise, the pain is gone. It's unreal. It's almost like magic."

He has five exercises to do . . . and must do each one 50 times, three times a day. That means 750 repetitions each day.

"It gets a little boring but the results are miraculous," he says, claiming the rite has given him that "brand new arm, basically."

Playing with the Packers for the second half of last season, Hadl completed 89 of 183 passes for 1,072 yards and three touchdowns. Never one reluctant to throw the ball, his statistics compare favorably with his lifetime figures, especially considering the questionable quality of the Packer receiving corps.

More important, however, Hadl did not show any significant signs of arm trouble. True, he did not connect on the bomb that became his trademark in the banner 1973 season with the Rams, but then he did not have a Harold Jackson to throw to either. In fact, most of the Packer completions in 1974 were to backs or tight end Rich McGeorge.

Simply looking at the black and white numbers, this might indicate that Hadl did indeed have an arm problem and couldn't throw long but the team's performance on the field could confirm only that the backs and tight ends were the best targets available.

In fact, Tagge, during his short-lived spell as No. 1 quarterback, found the same targets. In Tagge's case, some folks interpreted this to mean he didn't have the agility to avoid the rush until the receivers opened deep or the passing arm to get the ball there.

JACK CONCANNON WAS ONLY PACKER PASSER IN 1974 TO BETTER 50 PERCENT ON HIS PASSING.

Interestingly, though, their statistics were not that far apart. Tagge completed 47.9 per cent and had a 10.3 yards per completion average. Hadl completed 48.6 per cent and had a 12.0 yards per completion average. But Tagge was sacked only once for every 29.2 attempts while Hadl was sacked once for every 20.3 attempts.

Despite these latter statistics, though, Tagge's lack of quickness afoot seems to be his major drawback. He is young, though, going into only his fourth year. In fact, an injury cost him most of his first year so in reality, this will be only his third year. If the old axiom about it taking five years to make a pro quarterback holds true, Tagge cannot be ruled out as a potential starter.

Hadl is entering his 14th year and Concannon will be in his 11th season. The only real knock on Concannon is that he has never been a winner, largely because of a history of inconsistency. He would seem to be a perfect first reserve, however.

So with these three, discounting any Hadl arm problem, the Packers would seem to be in their best quarterbacking condition for some time. And if there is a familiar ring to it all, it could be that you heard of it before. The situation is much like that of the glory days when a guy named Bart Starr was an MVP quality quarterback, backed by a solid veteran named Zeke Bratkowski.

Starr, of course, is now the Packers' head coach and Bratkowski is his assistant in charge of quarterbacks, a combination that certainly can't hurt the overall effectiveness of the Packer signal group.

But then there is the aforementioned Brown. A 6-foot-2, 210-pounder from University of Pacific, Carlos was a running back last year. But the Packers drafted him 12th as a quarterback, indicating they must have been pretty well impressed by his junior year as a quarterback. In the spring camp, Brown did nothing to diminish that promise. He displayed a rifle arm and a certain moxie that impressed observers. Only his techniques need work, understandably since he had not played the position for a year.

Brown, however, is strictly a future possibility. Right now, the Packers are counting on their used Cadillac to transport them upward in the standings.

JORGIE'S ALL PSYCHED UP

. . . SOMETHING SPECIAL

Bud Jorgensen was a Packer for 47 years . . . and he's been retired for nigh onto five years.

But now he's more psyched up about the Pack than ever.

"Well, I guess I'm hepped up about the Packers every year but this season is something special because of Bart," the Packers' longtime trainer said as he passed Birthday No. 71 last April.

Jorgensen, who came to the Packers in 1924 and worked through 1970 before retiring, says "I think hiring Bart to take over the team was one of the greatest things the Packers have done in a long time.

"I honestly believe Bart will turn the Packers around. You'll see some good football. You can be sure of that."

Bart Starr, of course, was one of Jorgie's "kids" (as he referred to the players) back in 1956 when he reported as rookie.

Starr was often called a "fast healer" since he was able to throw off injuries and be ready, to which Jorgensen remarked: "Sure he was a fast healer but he wasn't always healed. He just made up his mind to play — hurt or not."

Jorgensen, a long time resident on Gray Street in Green Bay, keeps busy these days with golf and fishing, plus working around the house. He's active in the Packer Alumni Assn., and to keep in the swim he serves as trainer for the University of Wisconsin-Green Bay basketball team.

Other than that, Bud is pure Packer fan.

Jorgie is a member of the Helms Hall of Fame, being chosen in 1968, and also was the first recipient of the Arnie Herber Award. Though he is virtually self taught, Jorgensen is considered an expert on athletic muscles and bones and often lectured at trainer clinics during his career.

Bud's story is interesting:

"I first got involved with the ball club because my dad worked for the railroad and he got me a pass so I could make a trip with the team," he said. "That was in 1924.

"Pat Holland was the trainer and equipment man then. He wanted to hang it up so Curly Lambeau (then coach and general manager) said, 'Why don't you help Pat and learn the ropes so you can step in there?' So I did and took over when Pat left after the season ended.

"Hugo Quist, a professional Olympic trainer from Sweden, came here in 1929 as trainer and he was with us for two years, during which time I assisted him. After he left, I worked alone until 1935. We had our training room on the third floor of the Columbus Club (now the WBAY building) then. In 1935 Dave Woodward came in and he was head trainer through 1939 and I was assistant trainer and equipment man.

"Woodward passed away in February of 1940 and I took over then as head trainer. I stepped down at the end of the 1969 season and just worked part-time in 1970, when Domenic Gentile succeeded me as head trainer."

Reflecting upon the changes that progress has wrought in his profession, Jorgie noted with a twinkle, "It's a far cry from what it was when I started. All we had then was a bottle of Sloan's Liniment and a few rolls of tape.

"Now we've got every kind of medicine you can think of—hydrotherapy, electro-therapy . . . They all help speed up the healing and recuperation process.

"As far as injuries are concerned, they are basically about the same kind today that we had years ago. The fundamentals of the game, of course, also are about the same as they were years ago. And human beings haven't changed a bit — maybe mentally but not physically. A sprain is still a sprain—although we may know a little more about treating it now.

There are other memories . . . But his greatest rewards, Bud says, have come from another source.

"People are what have meant the most to me . . . I've met some great people over those 47 years. If I was to name 'em all, I would have a list as long as both of my arms.

"Victories have been important, too — I've had the good fortune to work with some of the greatest ball clubs in history. But it was the opportunity of working with some great people that has been the most satisfaction.

"The greatest opportunity was working for The Master. I worked for two masters, Lambeau and Vince Lombardi—but the greatest was Lombardi.

"When he left here in 1968 to join the Redskins, I told him that he said, 'Don't forget the monetary end of it.' And I said, 'Money isn't the only thing . . . It was an education in itself working with you.' "

Curiously enough, although he has shared in 11 National Football League titles, none of them is involved in the genial Dane's most memorable moment.

"The biggest thrill I ever had came in 1928," Bud says. "That was the first year we played in New York and we beat the Giants (7-0). George Calhoun (then publicity director and traveling secretary of the Packers) sent me out to Doc March's house to pick up the Packers' check for their share of the game.

"Doc March, who was the president of the Giants then, had his place in Harlem. As I was riding out there on the subway, I saw a number of people reading the papers and the headlines read something like, 'Green Bay Packers Defeat New York Giants.' That was really a big thrill.

"Of the 700 or 800 people on that train," Jorgie noted with a grin, "I was the only one who knew where Green Bay was.

"I began with them in the old City Stadium (now known as East Stadium) and saw 'em into the present, new one," he mused. "I had no more idea than Lambeau himself that this thing was going to grow to its present dimensions. Lambeau purchased the franchise for what, $250? . . . What's it worth now, seven or eight million?"

What ever the value, it couldn't match Jorgie's personal appraisal.

"It's the greatest football organization in the world," he declares. "Nobody will give me an argument on that."

RECORD KICK BLOCKERS

The 1974 Packers, not the most artistic team in the standings, had a super year in the business of blocking kicks.

They blocked 12 kicks during the campaign and easily established an NFL record. No records are actually kept in the NFL record manual but league observers figured the previous high was seven by the Redskins.

The Packers blocked four extra points, four field goals and four punts and the chief performer was Ted Hendricks whose seven blocks established an individual record. Here are the blocked kicks:

Extra Points (4) — Hendricks (Cox, Vikings); McCoy (Cox, Vikings); Ellis (Dempsey, Eagles); Williams (Dempsey, Eagles).

Field Goals (4) — Hendricks (Linhart, Colts, 47 yards); Hendricks (Mann, Lions, 27 yards); McCoy (Cox, Vikings, 46 yards); Hendricks (Gossett, 49ers, 42 yards).

Punts (4) — Hendricks (Weaver, Lions, safety); Hendricks (Parsons, Bears); Pureifory (Wittum, 49ers); Hendricks (Wittum, 49ers).

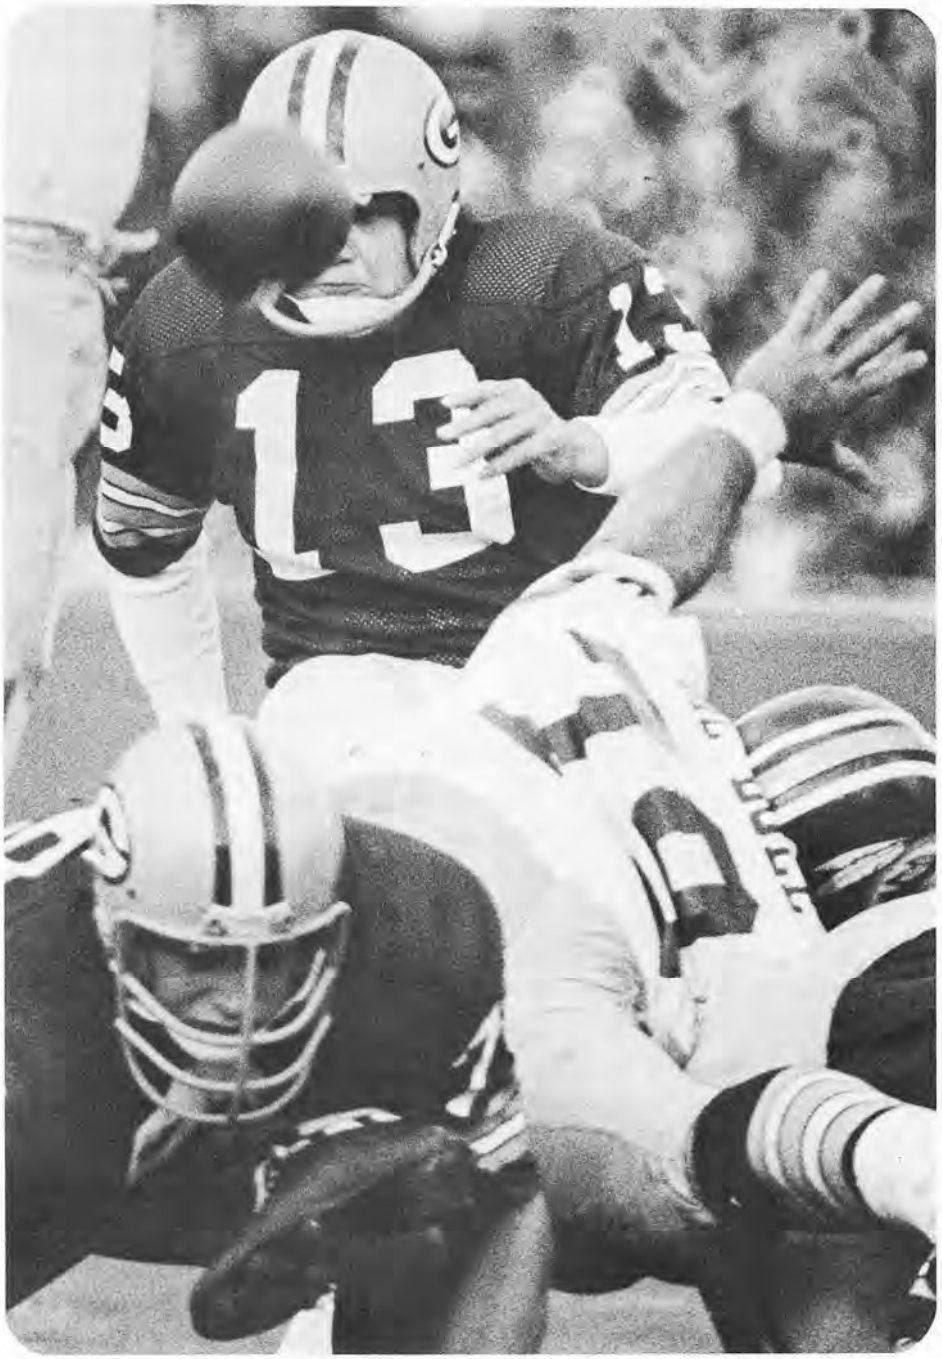
CHESTER would like more work



CHESTER MARCOL KICKS SECOND FIELD GOAL, FROM 46 YARDS OUT, AGAINST REDSKINS IN GREEN BAY NOV. 3. THE TWO 79s ARE HARRY SCHUH AND RON McDOLE.

By GENE W. HINTZ
United Press International

Chester Marcol would like more work in 1975.

It's not that he's been idle since joining the Green Bay Packers three years ago. It's just that he feels rules changes last year cut down on his effectiveness.

And besides, the curly-topped graduate of tiny Hillsdale College in Michigan would like to try his hand—make that foot—at punting.

"It's been a long time since I punted in competition," said Marcol. "But I'm hoping. I'd like to try, at least in exhibition games, to see if I could do both.

"I'm hoping someday I get a chance. Maybe not this year, but soon."

Marcol came to Green Bay in 1972 listed as a double duty specialist — placekicking and punting. Dan Devine, however, felt it might be better, at least in his rookie year, to concentrate on just one facet of the game — and there was no question as to where the concentration should be.

At Hillsdale Marcol had set a national record with a 62-yard field goal, had been written up in Sports Illustrated and looked like the answer to Green Bay's kicking problems.

In the five years after the retirement of Don Chandler, the Packers had tried nine placekickers. They attempted 74 field goals and made only 33 — an average of just 44.6 per cent.

Devine's decision was a little like that made by Chester's college coach when the Polish-born Marcol was a sophomore.

"In high school, I played defensive back and ran back punts," Marcol recalled. "I was doing that again in college when he called me into his office. He said he thought I had a future in pro ball and thought I should just kick."

Both coaches proved to be correct.

Marcol did indeed have a future in professional football — he was the NFL rookie of the year in 1972 — and, concentrating solely on placekicking, he led the league in scoring in two of his first three years.

He also shattered Green Bay records and neared NFL marks in his rookie season, hitting 33 of 48 field goals and getting 128 points.

While Marcol answered the Packers' placekicking problem, another developed last year.

Ron Widby, who had taken the Green Bay punting job when Marcol became a one-way specialist, had trouble recovering from back surgery and rookie Randy Walker became the punter.

Walker suffered through a so-so year, averaging only 38.4 yards a kick — the poorest average since Donny Anderson's 36.6 mark of 1967.

The average, undoubtedly, was hurt by the new rules that forced many punts from inside the 45 and placed a premium on aspects other than distance.

"Placement and height are so important with the new rules," Walker admitted. "In college, I had to kick as far as I could. I don't think you're going to see any more 45-yard averages. I'd be happy with 41. But mainly, I've got to get more consistent."

At any rate, as the 1975 camp opened, the punting job was wide open. It was no secret new Coach Bart Starr would like some improvement, whether from Widby, Walker, newcomer Spike Jones — or Marcol.

Chandler's FG percentage of 73.1 in his last year is one of the best ever for a kicker with so many successes.

"Under the old rules, anything over 65 per cent would be, in my opinion, excellent," Marcol said. "Now, it's difficult to say. It'll take a few years to see just what this rule means to the professional football player."

Marcol said the fact that kickers will be trying "many, many more longer field goals than they would have otherwise played a part in the estimate."

And, he said, "you just don't attempt as many as before."

He noted his 39 tries in 1974 were four more than his 1973 total, but added, "field position is what determines it and last year I could have had 10 or 15 more tries if it wasn't that the goal posts were in the end zone.

CHESTER MARCOL . . . FREQUENTLY INTERVIEWED AFTER GAME.

"There were numerous times we punted from the 38 or 40 yard line."

In addition to putting the goal posts on the end line instead of the goal line, the new rules also provide for kickoffs from the 35 instead of the 40.

Marcol, in the past, had gotten almost as much of a thrill from a nonreturnable kickoff as he did from a game-winning field goal.

That was the case a few years ago, for instance, when his kickoff with seconds remaining kept the Chicago Bears from returning a kick for a possible last second try at a win.

"Yeah, that was a big one for me — especially the way the wind was going that day," Marcol said. "It hit the crossbar."

Now, Marcol says, "it's hard to kick the ball so they can't return it. Before, if you kick 65 or 67 yards, you knew they wouldn't bring it back. Now, even though you kick the ball 70 yards, it lands five deep and they bring it out regardless."

The 65-70 yard kicks may sound long to some, particularly those who remember Henry Jordan's quip in the 1960s about Jerry Kramer's boots. "We're the only team in pro football that kicks off and goes into a goalline defense," Jordan said.

Marcol is one of the best there is at the long field goal and on "short" kicks — 40 yards and less — he is virtually unmatched.

"I really don't do much different no matter where the ball is," Marcol said. "Anything inside the 40, when you don't need that kind of distance, I kick kind of easy. You get much more accuracy that way.

"A little further away, I kick a little lower because that way I get better distance. I try to kick the ball the same way each time, except inside the 40, I can take it a little easier."

Since joining Green Bay, Marcol has tried 11 field goals of 50 yards or more, hitting on three, one of them a record-tying 52-yarder.

He has been successful on 16 of 36 from 40 to 49 yards out and close in he is almost automatic.

He has missed only once inside the 20—against Dallas in Milwaukee in a Packer win in 1972 — and has missed just three of 31 inside the 30.

Marcol admits many soccer-style kickers have trouble getting adequate height on the ball, but "I think that can be worked out."

He had six tries blocked in his rookie year, only three since.

"It's something I've been working on, now it doesn't seem to be much of a problem," he said.

"A lot of times it depends on the weather and the turf. There's an advantage to kicking on Astroturf.

It doesn't really require an effort to get the ball up from the surface.

"Many times, you play in those baseball parks where they let the grass grow quite high. It requires extra effort to put the ball up, and that's where you get less distance."

Marcol admits he's looking forward to the 1975 season, "just as I have every year."

But, he said, "this year will be a litle different because it is my first coaching change."

Has he set any goals?

"Yes, one," he answers, "going to the Super Bowl — and winning it."

As he puts it, "individual records are nice having, when you win. But it's hard to have a good year and then look back at the season and you're not anywhere."

Marcol now has moved into eighth place in the Packers' all-time scoring list with his 304 points.

He is 519 points behind the all-time record of 823 points established by Don Hutson in 11 years (1935-45) on 105 touchdowns, 172 extra points and seven field goals.

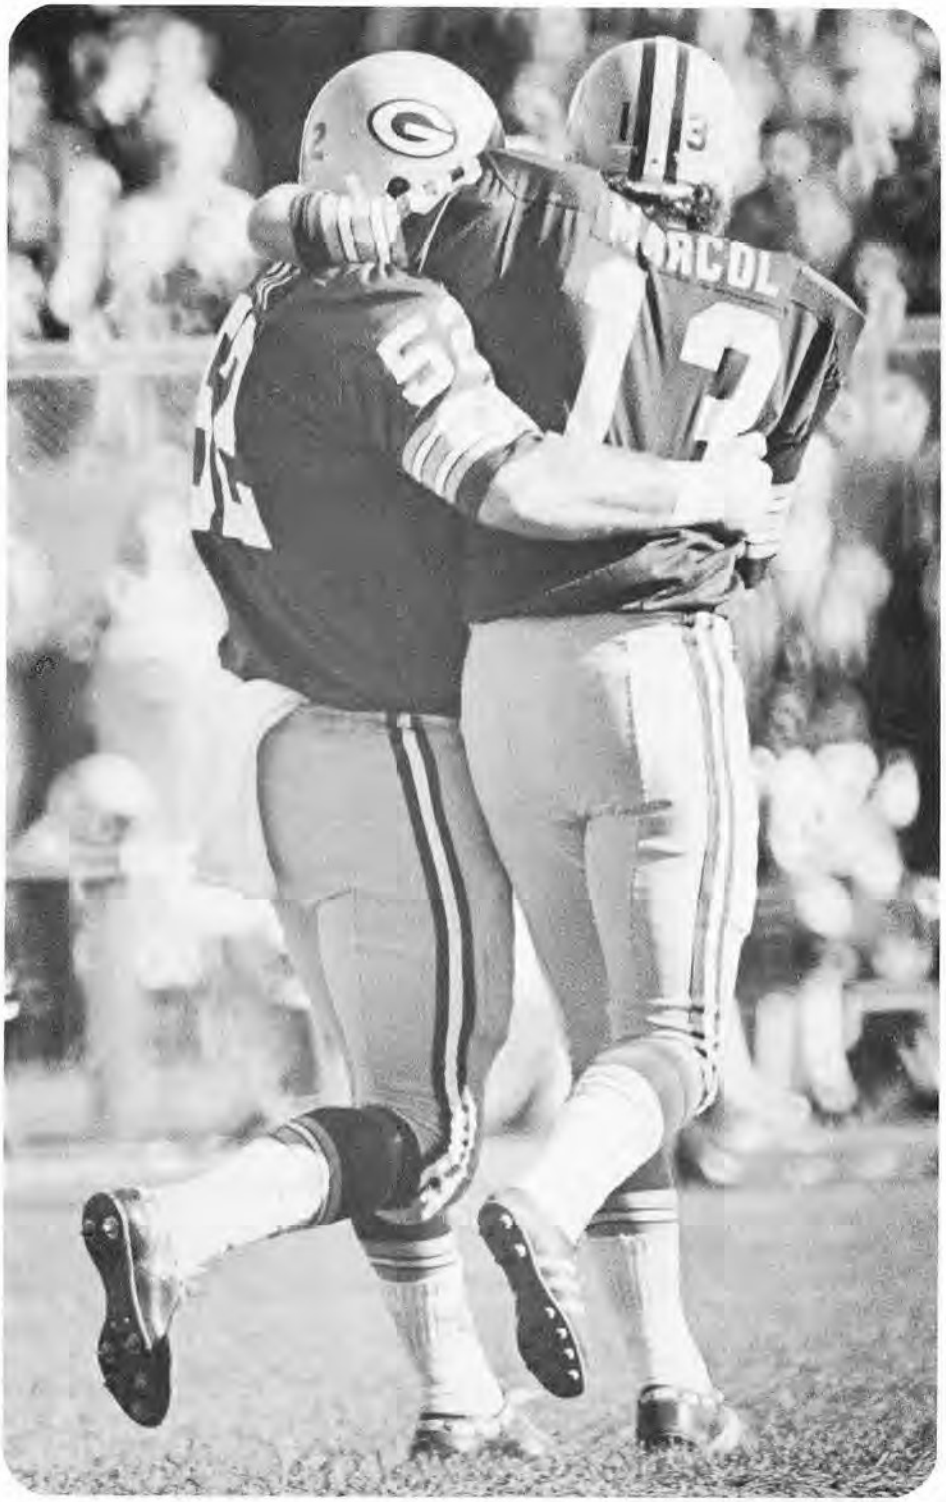
Marcol could reach or pass Hutson by averaging about 65 points per season in the next eight years — not an impossible task. That would mean the record could fall around 1983, when Chester is still a youngster of around 34. How old is George Blanda? Forty-eight in September!

The seven scorers in front of Marcol had benefit of touchdowns, which makes Chester the only specialist. Behind Hutson are Paul Hornung with 760 points on 62 TDs, 190 extra points and 66 field goals; Jim Taylor 546 on 91 TDs; Fred Cone 455 on 16 TDs, 200 extra points and 53 field goals; Ted Fritsch 392 on 37 TDs, 62 extra points and 36 field goals; Clarke Hinkle 373 on 43 TDs, 31 extra points and 28 field goals; and Max McGee 306 on 51 TDs.

Marcol is one of only three non-TD scorers in Packer history to score more than 100 points. Jerry Kramer, a guard who filled in behind Hornung, finished with 90 extra points and 29 field goals for 177 points in 11 seasons and Don Chandler posted 261 points on 177 extra points and 48 field goals.

Chandler, plucked from the New York Giants by Vince Lombardi, was with the Pack only three years but they were highly lucrative for him since they were the triple title years of 1965-67.

It's speculative, of course, but many observers felt that if Chandler had returned in '68 Phil Bengtson might have reached the playoffs in his first season as head coach. Chandler, however, wanted to be a weekend kicker and in such case his efficiency might have been reduced considerably.



A KICKER AND HIS CENTER — CHESTER MARCOL AND JOHN SCHMITT HUG IN THEIR JOY AFTER MARCOL KICKED KEY FIELD GOAL AGAINST LIONS IN MILWAUKEE SEPT. 29.

The leader among the early-day kickers was Guard Paul (Tiny) Engebretsen who scored 96 points on 48 extra points and 16 field goals in the 1935-41 era. Before him, the kingpin was Tackle Ernie Smith who had 66 points on seven field goals and 45 extra points in 1935-39.

Back in the 1920s, the non-touchdown kicking expert was guard-tackle Cub Buck, the one-time Wisconsin star, who scored 60 points on 24 extra points and 12 field goals. This was considered a high total in that low-scoring period.

the Running Game

By DALE HOFMANN
The Milwaukee Sentinel

When you get right down to it, it was John Brockington's own fault.

After all, who else could have gained 883 yards, finished second among NFC rushers and had a "bad" year. What difference does it make that only four other men carried a football that far in all of 1974.

Because John Brockington gained more than 1,000 yards in each of his first three seasons, he is expected to do it every year, just as car prices are expected to go up, and Wisconsin springs are expected to begin in June.

And the plain fact is he had better be able to do it again if the Packer running game is going to recover in 1975.

The word is "recover," all right. A year ago at this time or even three years ago at this time, the only question anyone was asking about the Packer offense is whether a passing attack could be found to go along with that wondrous running game. The answer was always no.

It's still a legitimate question, except there was nothing particularly wondrous about last year's running game. Green Bay picked up a total of 1,561 yards on the ground last year, which placed it exactly 19th in the National Football League. Another way to look at that is the Packers gained 412 fewer yards rushing in 1974 than they did in 1973. That's a drop of almost 30 yards a game.

Brockington himself was down 22 yards a game, even though he carried the ball almost exactly the same number of times — 266 in 1974 to 265 in 1973. If you still have your slide rule out, you know that comes to a full yard less per carry (3.3 compared to 4.3).

The simple answer then is for Brockington to run an extra yard every time he carries the ball, and everything will be sweetness and light again with the Packer running game.

Except that all the simple answers in football went out with the single wing and the flying wedge. In the first place, Brockington can't do it by himself, even though he almost had to last year.

His top running mate, MacArthur Lane, suffered a production dip that was even worse than Brockington's percentagewise last year. Lane went from 528 yards in 1973 to 362 in 1974. In his defense, he also got the ball 33 fewer times, but even then his average was a meager 2.6 yards a try.

Lane has been dropping steadily since his 821-yard year in 1972. However, if the 33 year old bruiser's future is behind him, it's going to come as an awful shock to Coach Bart Starr. As Starr put it recently, "We have two solid, durable offensive backs in John Brockington and MacArthur Lane. Our No. 1 need in the backfield is to find people to back them up.

ERIC TORKELSON . . . LOOKING FOR DAYLIGHT.

There is of course a No. 1 candidate to fill that No. 1 need. He's a No. 1 draft choice named Barty Smith, who spent the greater part of 1974 recovering from a knee injury suffered in a preseason all-star game.

Smith's knee was believed to be completely healed at the end of last year, which left him some time to concentrate on the rest of his anatomy. The 6-3, 240 pounder became a 6-3, 265 pounder during all that enforced idleness, but most of the excess was trimmed before the Packers' spring rookie camp.

Starr was highly impressed by Smith's performance in that camp, and he was happy to report that the young running back was within two pounds of the weight he was ordered to reach in time for the summer training schedule. "I'll tell you this," said Starr. "He sure was running this spring. We think he'll make a big contribution."

It's a little unfortunate, though, that Smith runs the same way Brockington and Lane do. Straight ahead. What the Packers have desperately needed for longer than anyone cares to remember is a back who runs around people, rather than over or through them.

Enter Willard Harrell, a 5-8 (that's right) 182 pound rookie and the Packers' brightest hope for outside speed. Harrell, a third round draft choice, averaged 130.8

yards a game as a senior for the University of Pacific by, as he puts it "avoiding head on collisions."

Even placekickers have trouble avoiding head on collisions in the National Football League, though, so Harrell may find his 4.4 speed to be not only handy but vitally necessary to his own well being. Starr admitted as much when he said, "He IS little. We'll probably use him as a spot player and in kick situations."

Size and speed, it seems, is a combination that does not come along every day. Like, how many Don Woods are there? But enough of that.

The remainder of the Packer talent at running back is roughly equal and largely untested. Also obscure. Eric Torkelson, Charlie Leigh and Les Goodman could pass through the What's My Line panel unscathed. Whether they could get through an opponent's defenses the same way with any consistency will be only a matter of conjecture unless something unfortunate happens to Brockington, Lane or Smith.

To a great extent, the progress of the Green Bay running game is going to depend on some jumbo sized citizens who never even carry the ball and some smaller ones who would really rather not. They're called offensive lineman and quarterbacks, respectively, and they do represent a ray of hope for the runners.

The Packers' offensive line has to be better this year simply because it has to be healthier and just as important is the continued good health of veteran John Hadl, the oldest starting quarterback the Packers have had in several years, but he's also indisputably the best.

So why, you ask, didn't he make any difference last year?

Well, as a matter of fact, he did. At least as far as Brockington was concerned. Big John gained just 354 yards in the first seven games of last year, but he added 529 in the last seven. It's not just a coincidence that the last seven were the ones Hadl started.

And simple arithmetic tells you that if Brockington's first half had been like his second half last season, he would have been in the 1,000 yard club for the fourth straight year.

It's not fair of course to give Hadl all the credit for Brockington's improved finish. He did a little soul searching after the early part of the season and admitted that he was trying to be too cute looking for large holes in the line rather than making the best of small ones. He appeared to have cured himself of that by the time the year was over.

It would help, too, if Brockington could get the ball more this year on handoffs and less on forward passes. He was Green Bay's

TYPICAL BROCKINGTON

The Packers are leading the Rams 10-6 in Milwaukee Oct. 13. Green Bay is on LA's 19-yard line after Ted Hendricks' interception with 4:20 left in the game.

John Brockington goes to work, courtesy of QB Jerry Tagge . . . four straight carries and, presto, the Packers win 17-6.

First, Brock slams off left tackle for four. Then, the right side for eight to the seven. He tries the middle for two.

Now it's second and five for the TD. Brock blasts up the middle behind a strong block by Bill Lueck (on ground) while Larry Brooks reaches too late . . . TD, standing up.

leading pass receiver last season, and Lane was second.

It is hoped that Starr will come up with a more imaginative offense to open things up for the runners. He did it as an assistant coach in 1972 . . . so why not as head man in 1975?

One thing is certain. Starr recognizes the importance of a solid running game, and Brockington is still a mighty good place to start in re-establishing that in Green Bay.

Starr undoubtedly is seeking a well balanced running attack and you don't have to go very far back to come up with a good example. In 1972, Brockington had his "poorest" thousand-yard year, settling for 1,027, but his running-mate, Lane, stacked up 821.

Between them, Brock and Mac averaged slightly over four yards a carry . . . and the Pack posted 10-4 for the Central Division title. Balance paid off—even with a mediocre air game.

Incidentally, Brockington went through last season with just one 100-yard game. That was a strong 32-trip, 137-yard showing in the surprising 19-7 victory over the Vikings in Minnesota.

Brock seemingly was "rested" for the next two games. He carried only 27 times for 97 yards against the Chargers in Green Bay (13 for 47) and Eagles in Philadelphia (14 for 50).

While defenses often dictate the moves of the offense, sometimes calling for more passing, Brockington's carries in consecutive games often have varied as many as 15 to 20 during his Packer career.

As a player, Starr handed off to Jim Taylor more than 1,500 times and the determined fullback now ranks as the Pack's all-time ground gainer with 8,207 yards. But Taylor ran in a backfield that was balanced runningwise by Paul Hornung, who piled up 3,712 yards.

This was almost perfect balance on the ground . . . and this is what Starr would like to achieve — this time as head coach.

STEVE ODOM RACES AHEAD OF BEARS' PETE VAN VALKENBURG ON HIS RECORD-BREAKING PUNT RETURN IN THE RAIN AND MUD IN MILWAUKEE COUNTY STADIUM NOV. 10.

A BOBBLE: then 20 year record falls

The littlest Packer made the biggest record noise for the Packers in 1974.

Steve Odom, a real mite at 5-foot-8 and 165 pounds, broke a 20-year-old record when he raced 95 yards with a punt return in the rain and mud against the Bears in Milwaukee Nov. 10.

The record of 93 yards was established by Veryl Switzer against the Bears in Chicago Nov. 7, 1954.

A versatile rookie, Odom actually bobbled the punt from Bob Parsons, picked it out of the slop in the County Stadium infield and then headed to his left. He turned the corner near the sideline behind a block by Dave Pureifory and then reversed his field. He feinted Parsons off-balance on the Bear 30 and then escaped a diving tackle by former Packer Pete Van Valkenburg.

The run took 25 seconds and the TD, with 3 seconds left in the half, helped the Pack win 20-3. Earlier in the game, Odom fumbled a kickoff and the Bears recovered to set up their only score.

HARD-WORKING RICH McGEORGE MAKES TOP 20 PACKER RECEIVERS.

Switzer, the onetime Kansas State flash whose career was cut short by military service, was happy to hear that his mark had been broken. "I wish to congratulate the young man," Switzer said from Kansas State University where he is dean of student affairs.

Odom, an end, scored three TDs in '74 — all different. Besides the punt return, he scored on a 56-yard pass reception from Jack Concannon against San Diego Nov. 24 and on a 28-yard end-around play against Minnesota Sept. 15 — both in Green Bay.

Chester Marcol was the only other Packer to establish a record in '74. His 25 field goals boosted his career total to 79, passing the all-time total of 66 by Paul Hornung over seven seasons. Marcol set the mark in three seasons.

Marcol also tied the distance mark of 52 yards held jointly by Ted Fritsch (1950) and Hornung (1964). Chester tied the mark against the Colts at Baltimore Sept. 22. Hornung made his longie on a free kick vs. the Bears in Green Bay while Fritsch set the original mark vs. the Yanks in New York.

Three Packers moved into the Top 20 receivers, including Tight End Rich McGeorge, who virtually begged for somebody to throw to him in '74. He wound up with 30 catches to give him a career total of 80. Joining him were John Brockington, who caught 43 last year, and MacArthur Lane, 34. Brock now has a total of 92, Lane 87.

Again this year, the following Packer records are presented with apologies to all those Packer greats who played before records were kept:

a permanent HALL OF FAME in Green Bay

By DICK KARBON
Green Bay Press-Gazette

It almost has become trite to say the Green Bay Packers are unique.

It's a fairytale of the little kid who made good in the big leagues. An uncertain beginning and some shaky years were overcome by a half-century of community support which has made the name Green Bay Packers the epitome of excellence in professional sports.

It is fitting, then, that the Green Bay Packer Hall of Fame also be unique in its method of preserving the rich Green and Gold tradition.

And so it is.

When the new Packer Hall of Fame gets its finishing touches late this year it will be rivaled only by the national Pro Football Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio.

As per Packer tradition, however, Green Bay may be one up again.

Bill Brault, head of the Brown County Visitor and Convention Bureau, said the latest in audio-visual techniques will be used to give Packer Hall visitors a feeling of intimacy with yesteryear.

"We want it to be exciting. We want people to be able to see and hear and feel," said Brault, a major block in the foundation of the Hall.

"Just to have old helmets and sweatshirts might be exciting for some, but we're leaning toward films and tapes and TV replays to make it exciting for everybody."

Like the team itself, the Hall of Fame was born in modesty.

In 1968, a section of hallway under the seats in the Brown County Veterans Memorial Arena — just across the street from Lambeau Field in Green Bay—was converted into the original Packer Hall of Fame and Museum.

Over a quarter of a million persons have passed through the turnstiles, many combining a day of railbirding at the next-door Packer practice field with a tour of the Hall.

Ironically, 1974 produced just 27,000 visitors, lowest in Hall of Fame history.

It was not unexpected, though, said Hall of Fame manager Tom Cuene. "Probably a majority of the people come here after a big day of watching practice, but we had the players' strike last year and it cut our attendance about 30 to 50 per cent each day it was on."

Cuene said 1974 did not dampen enthusiasm for the new Hall. "We're hoping to get in the neighborhood of 70,000 a year," he said.

The new Hall, it should be explained, will be just a short move from the old one — to another end of the Brown County Arena, keeping it close to the practice field and Lambeau Field.

A $275,000 addition will provide about 10,000 feet of floor space on the main floor, and a lower floor for possible expansion could add another 6,500 to 7,000 square feet.

Brault said there will be no trouble filling it with memorabilia.

"We haven't even solicited," he said. "I think if we ever came out asking for articles for this Hall of Fame, we'd be flooded. A fella came in with an old contract he found, and then you've always got people who have old helmets and jerselys and seats from the old stadium. Another guy came in with a fur coat he's worn to every game for the last 10 years.

"There's no end to it, but the key is to make it exciting. We don't want to appeal just to the buffs. It will be aimed at families seeking a tourist attraction with something for everybody, for young kids and fathers and mothers, regardless if they are even football fans or Packer fans.

"We want to tell the story of the Packers and make it exciting and entertaining. You just don't show a trophy, for example. You have a trophy display, and a good audio program with it.

"Let's say we have some people from Denver who have heard about the Packers, but they've never seen them and never been to Green Bay. We want them to be able to come here and see and feel the Packers.

"Another exhibit area that just goes on and on is newspaper clippings. You just can't believe the bulk of it. Our hope is possibly to have clippings on microfilm so a person could dig into an individual player or game from the past.

"I've been at the Hall of Fame in Canton, and it has four or five audio-visual programs. They've got a participation thing, where you can answer multiple choice questions, but they play the same NFL films that we do.

"But Canton has a little different set of problems. It has to be concerned with all the teams. We just have to worry about the Packers, and we can be more specific.

"I know there is some interest among other teams to have a Hall of Fame like ours, but none have done it. We here just grabbed the bull by the horns and did it.

"I haven't been totally proud of what we've had in the past, but still some people say they think ours is close to the one at Canton, and they've got a $3 million facility.

"We have interest in our Hall of Fame locally, but it's for people from all over the world. It's a natural attraction, from the standpoint of the Packers and greatness. With the new one, I know it will be even more successful," said Brault.

An offshoot of the Hall of Fame and Museum, has been the Hall of Fame Banquet in Green Bay. It began in 1970 and has been held annually every year since 1972.

Forty-eight players have been enshrined in the Hall of Fame—by decades starting with the 1920s — at the five banquets.

Inducted in 1970 (20s) — Bernard (Boob) Darling, Lavvie Dilweg, Jug Earpe, Cal Hubbard, Curly Lambeau, Vern Lewellen, Johnny Blood, Mike Michalske.

Inducted in 1972 (30s) — Hank Bruder, Milt Gantenbein, Charles (Buckets) Goldenberg, Arnie Herber, Clarke Hinkle, Don Hutson, Cecil Isbell, Russ Letlow, Joe Laws, George Svendsen.

Inducted in 1973 (40s)—Charlie Brock, Tony Canadeo, Larry Craig, Bob Forte, Ted Fritsch, Bobby Monnett, Buford (Baby) Ray, Andy Uram, Dick Wildung, Whitey Woodin.

Inducted in 1974 (50s)—Al Carmichael, Fred Cone, Bobby Dillon, Howie Ferguson, Bill Forester, Dave Hanner, Bill Howton, John Martinkovic, Jim Ringo, Tobin Rote.

Inducted in 1975 (60s) — Don Chandler, Willie Davis, Paul Hornung, Henry Jordan, Jerry Kramer, Ron Kramer, Vince Lombardi, Max McGee, Jim Taylor, Fred (Fuzzy) Thurston.

Only players or coaches who have been retired or deceased for five or more years are eligible for enshrinement. For each player enshrined, there is a sponsoring member of the Hall of Fame Association who donates $250 to finance a plaque in the player's honor. Officers of the Packer Hall of Fame Association are Tom Hutchinson, president; Peter Allerup, vice president; Harold Pfotenhauer, treasurer; Bill Brault, secretary; and Gerald Knox and Ben Laird.

A NIGHT TO REMEMBER

Eleven prominent members of the Packers' championship teams of the 1960s were enshrined in the Packer Hall of Fame at a banquet in Green Bay Jan. 25, 1975.

And Marie Lombardi seems to be offering Paul Hornung a bit of advice—much to the delight of his former teammates.

Marie accepted the Hall of Fame plaque on behalf of her late husband.

DRAFT The essence of competition

By RICH KOSTER
St. Louis Globe-Democrat

During a lazy, three-week vacation, I believe I rediscovered something in my own backyard which the California jurist in the Joe Kapp suit couldn't see from his bench. The draft isn't Pete Rozelle's brainchild. It wasn't Bert Bell's. And to credit or blame it on the 26 NFL moguls is naive.

It is rather the essence of competition, employed on the asphalt basketball courts of New York City, the playgrounds of Chicago and Los Angeles and the sandlots of St. Louis. Without any indoctrination, the kids of this country apply it generation after generation. I doubt even that it's handed down. It's so obvious, so essential, that they discover it for themselves.

Take any group of kids without supervision. Take any number, any sport. And you'll see their game begin with a draft.

If you get 10 kids on a Harlem playground, or a half-dozen in my backyard, the procedure is the same. The two best players — always recognized by consensus — will assume the role of captains. Then they'll pick their teammates by alternating selections, like a draft.

In my own youth or now, as I watch my sons, it hasn't varied. Why? Because it's the only way to assure competition. It's the best, the fairest way for boys to learn the lessons of sports. I think it's reflective of reality that youngsters accept the system as inevitable. They realize if the two best players join on one team, there will be no competition.

Even with winning as a priority, they recognize that in order to have a game, there must be balance. So they draft. Every day. Every week. Every season. Every generation.

Bain knows of Packer tradition

Bill Bain was well aware of the Packers before he was selected as Green Bay's first choice.

The Southern Cal guard-tackle said: "The Packers were winning all those championships when I was growing up. They had Forrest Gregg, Fuzzy Thurston and Jerry Kramer. I just wanted to play with them. In my opinion they were the greatest linemen in the game.

"Now, I'll get a chance to play in their tradition. I aspire to be a great guard, like they were."

Bain stands 6-4½ and weighs 269 pounds. During a spring visit to Green Bay, Bain tried on Mike McCoy's jersey, the largest in stock, and it was snug around the forearms.

Skip Husbands, USC offensive line coach, says "Bain has more physical ability than anybody drafted out of here. He has the versatility to play either guard or tackle but guard is the right spot for him."

Bain, who will be tried as a guard by the Packers, actually was drafted in the second round since the Pack's first round choice was traded to Los Angeles in the John Hadl deal.

Here are the Packers' 1975 draft choices and the figures in parens designate the order of selection among the 442 players chosen by the 26 teams:

1st Round — Choice (9) to Los Angeles in John Hadl trade.

2nd — Choice (23) from Baltimore in Ted Hendricks trade to Los Angeles in Hadl trade.

2nd — Choice (36) to Miami in Jim Del Gaizo trade.

2nd—Bill Bain, G, Southern Cal (47), from Washington in Dave Robinson trade.

3rd — Willard Harrell, RB, Pacific (58), from San Diego in Bob Brown trade.

4th — Steve Luke, DB, Ohio State (88).

5th — Choice (113) to Dallas in Jack Concannon trade.

6th — Choice (140) to Los Angeles in Harry Schuh trade.

7th—Tony Giaquinto, WR, Central Connecticut State (165).

8th—Choice (192) to Baltimore in Hendricks trade.

9th — Jay Hodgin, RB, South Carolina (217).

10th—William Cooke, DE, Massachusetts (244).

11th — Bob Martin, DE, Washington (269).

12th—Carlos Brown, QB, Pacific (296).

13th—Bob Fuhriman, DB, Utah State (321).

14th — Stan Blackmon, TE, North Texas State (348).

Farewell to 1974

The Packers' season of 1974 — the last under Coach Dan Devine — was one of great extremes.

There was a three-game losing streak in midseason, then a three-game winning string, and finally three straight losses. The Bays failed to score a touchdown in the last two defeats, 7-6 to the 49ers and 10-3 to the Falcons.

Two emotional victories over Division Champion Los Angeles and Minnesota highlighted the Packers' 55th NFL season.

Green Bay split its first four games and then upset the Rams and John Hadl, 17-6, to apparently turn the corner. But then came three losses in a row, including two by three points (Bears 10-9 and Lions 19-17). Devine obtained Hadl in a trade after the Bear game and the move seemingly paid off in a hurry as the Packers whipped the Bears, the Vikings in a classic at Minnesota, and the Chargers.

With the record at 6-5 and a chance to finish 9-5, the Pack went into an unbelievable tailspin, starting with a five-lost-fumble embarrassment at Philadelphia.

The complete statistical record of the season follows:

Dreams become a reality

By JOHN L. PAUSTIAN
Appleton Post-Crescent

The most-interviewed Pittsburgh Steeler during Super Bowl IX week in New Orleans was not super rusher Franco Harris, super defender Joe Greene or revitalized glamor quarterback Terry Bradshaw. The big story was Bob (Rocky) Bleier, a fringe player through much of his six-year National Football League career, who had emerged as a combination Horatio Alger and Cinderella man.

Though Bleier was a relatively obscure performer for most of the nation, Packerland fans had known him longer and better. To them, Rocky's eventual breakthrough wasn't all that surprising. When Bleier was a 15-year-old high school sophomore, he already presented strong evidence of his singular talent and determination.

On Oct. 21, 1961, Appleton Xavier, a new school seeking athletic recognition, invaded Green Bay East Stadium (where the Packers had often made pro football history) to challenge Premontre, an established prep power, for conference leadership. With only 4:23 left to play and the score knotted at 16, Bleier swept the Cadets' left flank. He came perilously close to the sideline, but somehow maintained his balance and tight-roped his way 23 yards for the winning touchdown. Four minutes earlier, Bleier had thrown a 24-yard scoring pass to tie the game.

Bleier said later, "Green Bay is the city of my boyhood dreams, and everything the Packers stand for—the bad years and the good years." Bleier will face his one-time heroes Oct. 26 when the Steelers and the Packers square off in Milwaukee County Stadium. The last time the teams met in regular-season play (1970), Bleier was inactive, recovering from Vietnam War wounds.

The star that was born on that autumn afternoon in Green Bay 14 years ago, continued to shine for the next two seasons. As a 3-year starter, Bleier led Xavier to 27 straight victories, three league titles and the No. 1 state rating for independent schools. Rocky scored at least one touchdown in each of the 27 games and logged a career total of 56 TDs. In '62, when Bleier earned the first of his two all-state citations, he averaged 12.5 yards every time he carried the ball from scrimmage.

Bleier decided to continue his education under Notre Dame's Golden Dome. He became a backfield regular on the Irish's 1966 national championship team and was named captain in '67. Though he lacked dominating size or blinding speed, Bleier was a solid performer.

Everything had gone right for Bleier during his high school and collegiate careers, but the winds of change were destined to blow up a storm. The way Rocky counter-attacked adversity earned him such awards as the "Most Courageous Athlete of 1974" (as picked by Philadelphia writers) and the Vince Lombardi Award for dedication to football (presented by Wisconsin writers).

The first jolt for Bleier came in the '68 NFL draft. Bleier tells how he got up early the first day of the draft, so he would be readily available by phone at the time of selection. However, the phone never rang. He again arose early the next morning, but the waiting continued. Finally, in the 16th round, Pittsburgh drafted him. Though his ego was somewhat shaken, Bleier applied himself, as always, and won a spot on the club's final roster. However, before he was able to complete his first Steeler season, Rocky was drafted again — this time by the U. S. Army.

Bleier was fated to become one of only two NFL players to fight in Vietnam. Although obviously not overjoyed about having his career interrupted, Bleier, typically, gave it all he had — winning a Bronze Star and a Purple Heart — in the world of rice paddy warfare, where sudden death had a literal meaning. He nearly lost his life and no one ever came closer to losing a career. Bleier's destiny changed Aug. 20, 1969, as a member of the 196th Light Infantry. Bleier took a bullet in his left leg, and, later a grenade exploded, tearing up his right foot, knee and thigh.

In a real-life MASH (mobile surgical army hospital), doctors fought to save Bleier's right leg. The infection threatened to become gangrenous. After he was flown back to Saigon, it was determined that amputation wouldn't be necessary. However, doctors told him his football career was over. The atrophying of muscles had already left his big toe and second toe lifeless. (Even now, Bleier runs only on the right side of his right foot).

Several hospitals and three operations later, Bleier showed up at the Steelers' 1970 summer camp, determined to begin his comeback. But, he ran with obvious pain, and his speed for the 40-yard dash was a laborious (for a running back) 5.0 seconds. After undergoing more surgery, Bleier got to suit up for the final game of the season — but he didn't play.

The odds against Bleier multiplied when he was hampered by a pulled hamstring in '71. During his first three seasons back, it was pretty much the same story: getting cut, clearing waivers, being placed on the taxi squad and eventually being activated for special teams duty. The recurring theme of the advice he got from the team physician, from Coach Chuck Noll and from some of his teammates was: "You ought to quit, Rocky. It really isn't worth putting yourself through all this."

Bleier's gutsy stand impressed the Steelers' compassionate owner, Art Rooney, and general manager Dan Rooney. Noll was advised to keep Rocky around until he felt he had had enough. That day never came, because each season, Rocky came back closer to his 100 per cent recovery goal. His gruelling off-season running and weight-lifting regimen built his speed up to :04.55 and his weight to 210 (from a hospital low of 165).

The '72 season wasn't far along when Bleier, hitting with his old-time vigor, became a fixture on the so-called suicide squad. A Steeler coaching aide termed Bleier "the top man on our specialty teams" during '72 and '73. Though his comeback had become a reality and he was making vital contributions to the team, Rocky remained unfulfilled as a pro football player. He had carried the ball only thrice from scrimmage in '73 and only 18 times in his Steeler career.

Bleier kept insisting, during interviews, that he could cut it as a regular running back if he could get a chance. That opportunity came when the '74 season was about a month old. With injuries having hampered several other running backs, Noll turned to Bleier—and the stocky dynamo responded like a man who "belongs."

Shortly thereafter, in a Monday night TV game against Atlanta, Harris returned to the lineup and teamed with Bleier for the first time. Though he gained a career high of 141 yards, Franco insisted in sharing the glory. "Rocky made some beautiful blocks," acknowledged Harris. Bleier had also chalked up a personal pro high of 78 yards in the game. Rocky was to total 373 yards rushing (for a 4.2 average) as the Steelers roared to the AFC Central title.

Though the pressure increased with the advent of the playoffs, Bleier, if anything, became even better. For the three post-season wins, including the Super Bowl, Rocky averaged nearly 100 yards of total offense per game. In the opener against Buffalo, Bleier caught a 27-yard touchdown pass from Bradshaw that put the Steelers ahead, 9-7, and they were never to trail again. Altogether, the playoff "rookie" grabbed three passes, for 54 yards, and rushed 14 times for 45 yards.

As if to prove TV commentator Don Meredith wrong (the ex-Dallas quarterback had made a pre-game observation that Pittsburgh might be suspect at the running back spot opposite Harris), Bleier had a dazzling 98-yard rushing day (in 18 attempts) against Oakland. And he was just as impressive as a blocker. "He's just like having a guard in the backfield," said Noll of Bleier. "He just knocks hell out of people."

Dreams had become reality for Bleier, an ex-war cripple and ex-fringe player. He was a starter in the prestigious Super Bowl and made the most of his chance. Relying on his quick acceleration and drive, Bleier logged 65 overland yards against the vaunted Minnesota defense. His 21-yard run fueled the late-game, 66-yard scoring march that enabled Pittsburgh to pull away after the Vikes had closed to within 9-6. Bleier also caught two passes for 11 yards as the Steelers became world champions (16-6) for the first time in their 42-year history.

It was an arduous undertaking, but Bleier had finally—and fully—proven his point. "I wanted to prove to others and myself that I could play in the NFL," said Rocky. "And I didn't want to disappoint all the people who had put faith and trust in me."

Bleier regards his Super Bowl ring as a symbol "It means you're one of the very few people who have reached the pinnacle of pro football, and when you help your team win and overcome some odds to get there, it means even more."

Packers get back Super Bowlers to back

BOB GRIESE

No team in the NFL ever has an easy schedule . . . but some are tougher than others.

Spacing has a little to do with the degree of difficulty.

For instance, a team could get the Super Bowl finalists back to back . . . like the Packers, who play the Super Bowl champion Steelers in Milwaukee Oct. 26 and then engage the Super Bowl runnersup Vikings in Green Bay a week later.

It could be worse. Those two games could be in Pittsburgh and Minnesota. At least, the Packers will have the backing of their own fans. Always a big help.

One good way to measure the toughness of a schedule is to view the opponents' success a year ago. Of the 11 Packer opponents, seven finished at .500 or better in 1974 and four of those bettered .700 — the Dolphins (.786 on 11-3), the Steelers (.750 on 10-3-1), and the Vikings and Rams (.714 each on 10-4).

In addition, the Lions finished with .500 (7-7 after losing their first four games), the Broncos with .536 (7-6-1) and the Cowboys with .571 (8-6).

The other four were losers — Saints (.357 on 5-9), the Bears (.286 on 4-10), the Falcons (.214 on 3-11) and the Giants (.143 on 2-12). But so were the Packers (.428 on 6-8).

The Packers open in Milwaukee for the first time since 1961 — a championship year, if you will. The opponent is the same, Detroit, but that '61 starter was bad news 17-13. Remember? Yale Lary, the Lion punter, ran instead of punting (an old habit) to set up the Lions' winning TD.

Next, a Monday night TV battle — in Denver, giving the Pack a chance to atone for the poor showing (10-9, Bears) a year ago on the Monday show.

The Packers then open at Lambeau Field Oct. 5 against the Dolphins, who in '74 had hoped to better the Pack's record of two straight Super Bowl titles. The game will mark the first appearance of Miami and their great quarterback, Bob Griese, the Bart Starr of the '70s, in Green Bay. It's tough playing after a Monday nighter but at least the Bays will be home.

After visiting New Orleans and Dallas, the Packers face the Steelers and Vikings to complete the first half of the card. Incidentally, the Steeler game will be only the Packers' second game against a Super Bowl champion. The first occasion was the Cowboy game in Milwaukee in '72 when the Cowboys were fresh from a 24-3 SB win over the Dolphins.

The Packers of '72 used that victory over the Champs as a springboard to the Division title . . . and Bart Starr was the Pack's offensive coach that year.

The Packers open the second half at Chicago and Detroit and then return home to meet the Giants in Milwaukee and Bears in Green Bay. Then, it's on the road again — Minnesota and sunny Los Angeles. The closeout, barring a playoff, brings the Falcons to Green Bay Dec. 21.

Time to go shopping and see what's new. Time to look into 1976's good-looking, smooth-riding, long-lasting list of Arctic improvements.

Time to get acquainted with a whole new model called Pantera. And a new ski designed for easier control. And a new engine called the Spirit, that we figure will revolutionize snowmobiling — because it sure does revolutionize the Cat.

Time to take a good, long look at the good time Pantera and El Tigré and Cheetah and Jag and Lynx.

Time to see why Arctic still leads the way — and why good times are comin' on the Cat.
